What am I learning?	The students start off with the topic Life in Modern Britain which looks at British identity/personal identity and the idea of British Values	We continue with this unit and focus on the different forms of media and how it might influences us in how we see the UK compared to other countries around the world.	In this half term, we focus on the last part of Life in Modern Britain, which is the UK and their involvement and the role they play in international organisations.	The students' then move onto Rights and Responsibilities that focuses on the different elements of the Criminal justice system and the vital role each element plays in relation to the law.	The students continue with this unit and focus on criminal and civil law, examples of crimes that break these laws and the punishments that are given.	In this half term, the students still study this unit but they go into more detail on the punishments that might be given and how this influences our human rights.
Why am I learning this?	As we are in the UK, it is important for students to understand the country in which they live so they can be informed members of their society.
